

Science Fiction Warship

By Rob Morgan

You can of course make a Science Fiction warship from almost anything. This is an example. I paid about a pound for a lump of metal originally an American battleship, but without any turrets or small pieces, just the cast hull. All I did in this case is add four small robo-turrets, the name the manufacturer of fantasy etc. stuff gave them, at a mere 20 pence each, and also a large plastic dome, a game counter for a sort of radar or secret weapon cover.

That's all.

Why? Well, why waste a good hull and of course I can bring this out at events, and use it as an alternative in what might otherwise just be a slogging match between grey lines.

Yes, the speed and armour of a battleship, but what else ...?
